> PLUTTER IN THE AMERICAN COLONY IN LONDON. -Our American colony is a little fluttered. Those who can get away most readily are considering whether their first flight shall be to Lizerpool or Puris. In any case the Havre l'ne will be open. But what is to be done by ladies who in an anguarded moment, have consented to marry Englishmen? Now, the English and American flags wave pracefully together over the fire place, and the only contests are whether the American peaches, apples and oysters are better than the English. The lessband reads his Times. and the Yankee wife looks up from her sewing of small garments and asks. - Well, dear, what news? Are we going to fight? Hadn't you better pay up, now settle that little matter, and have done with it?" And my American friends who have got themselves spliced to robust, rosy English girls, who walk off ten miles of a morning. I fear they get the worst of it in these patriotic little colloquies. "Now, dear, you so slow in catching that stapid old Alabama! And it happened so long ago, too, when I was a little girl. What can be the use of raking up such old matters? Why not go back to the battle of Bunker Hill and done with it ?"-Lon-
